(57) Abstract :

The present invention is related to a bilayer gastro retentive film. According to the invention, Gastro retentive films are a type of drug delivery system designed to remain in the stomach for a prolonged period of time, thereby increasing drug absorption and improving therapeutic efficacy. These films are thin, flexible, and typically adhere to the gastric mucosa, allowing the drug to be released slowly and steadily over time. In addition to their therapeutic benefits, gastro retentive films offer several advantages over traditional drug delivery systems. They are easy to swallow and can be administered without water, which is especially important for patients who have difficulty swallowing pills or who are unable to drink water. They also eliminate the need for frequent dosing, which can improve patient compliance and reduce the risk of adverse effects.
